

This week I did my first flowchart. This was a new experience for me and I enjoyed jumping into it and trying to figure it out for myself with the assistance of some example material. Creating the flowchart was difficult, but it allowed me to explore new ways of planning. The week was difficult as far as time management and organization of past assignments. I didn't realize that I was given a message to correct my mission statement and failed the assignment due to my own oversight. This is the only failing grade that I have ever received in full sail, so I was a little frustrated with myself about it. Now I know to keep an eye on my assignments better for next time.

I also know to update my Readme file. I wasn't doing that correctly in the past, so I plan on fixing that and updating it accordingly. We had a big snow storm this weekend and I ended up losing power intermittently throughout the weekend. All the studying and research I planned on doing didn't work out as well as expected. I was still able to get my assignments completed to the best of my abilities. I think for the final week of this class, I should finish out strong and with a firm grasp of all the concepts that we have learned.